Cinema's contribution to the elimination of sexual violence against children

ROUND TABLE PRESENTATION

Available data suggest that about 1 in 5 children in Europe is a victim of some form of sexual violence. It is estimated that in 70% to 85% of cases, the abuser is somebody the child knows and trusts. Child sexual violence can take many forms: sexual abuse within the family circle, child pornography and prostitution, undue exposure of children to sexual content or activities, solicitation of children via Internet and sexual assault by peers.

Children who are sexually abused often take refuge in silence because they feel shame, guilt and fear. This form of violence is nourished by the taboos surrounding sexuality and protected by the wish to preserve the reputation of a family, a school, a church, a state care institution for children or a sports club.

Raising awareness on the prevalence of sexual violence is of capital importance. Society needs to be empowered so that each institution and each person can take the adequate measures to protect children, prosecute the criminals, prevent, identify and report abuse.

The Council of Europe campaign One in Five aims at promoting the changes in legislation and policies needed for those measures to be effectively taken.

After exploring the main features of sexual violence against children, the objective of the Round table will be to analyse the Cinema's contribution to the awareness raising effort. On the one hand, films are contributing to shedding light on a topic otherwise confined by taboos. On the other hand, cinema stars can be precious role models for campaigning purposes, inciting people to take the necessary action. The languages of the debate will be English and Italian (simultaneous interpretation).
