2. Summary

Natalie Hami and Fanny Cheyrou chose to explore how young people in both Cyprus and France felt about the EU and its future, as well as the recent MEP elections in their respective countries. They concluded that even though some very much believe in the institution that is the EU many feel that they don't see any direct impact from being in the EU. There is also a lot of indifference to the EU expressed by young people in both countries.

3. Dissemination of the Output

The output will be first of all disseminated by web radio on a show which is part of the Cyprus Community Media Centre. There are also plans to have it translated into French and Greek and have either all or parts of it published in various national newspapers such as La Croix, the Cyprus Mail and Politis newspaper. A suggestion was also made by a political figure in Cyprus to have it disseminated to all the island's political parties.

4. Biographies of the authors

Natalie Hami is currently a travel journalist at Travel Trade Gazette Middle East & North Africa, but previously worked in the newsroom at the Cyprus Mail newspaper, the island's top daily English language paper, covering subjects such as human interest stories, politics, crime, the EU and health among others.

Fanny Cheyrou is currently working as a "collaboratrice" for Radio Vaticana and as a freelance correspondent for newspapers and magazine such as the weeklies Le Parisien Magazine, Pèlerin, the national daily La Croix, and the regional website from Bordeaux, Aqui.fr. She is mainly covering international issues in French language for radio programmes of Radio Vaticana and written articles for the newspapers just mentioned".
