As part of the judicial reform, the Albanian Parliament has drafted a law, officially aiming to fight corruption, that will threaten freedom of speech and media freedom, says the Association of professional journalists (APJ).

The article 13 of the draft legislation regulating “the organisation and functioning of institution to encounter corruption and organised crime" states that "any inappropriate influence on the work of the special prosecutors or their actions on specific issues through the public authorities or the media, or any other form of pressure that impacts on the independence of prosecutors, is prohibited and punished by the law."

Journalists’ associations in Albania have expressed concerns that the wording might limit their right to free speech and impose censorship. Under the provision, any journalist or media organisation reporting on the case pursued by the authorities could be accused of violating the law and could face up to three years in prison.

01 Mar 2017: Taking into account the modifications to the anti-corruption law, as adopted by the Albanian Parliament in October 2016 and which subsequently entered into force, that clarified the article 13, amending its ambiguous provisions, on 1 March 2017, the partner organisations to the Platform declared this case to be “resolved”, concluding it was no longer an active threat to media freedom.
EFJ: “Albanian journalists demand Parliament to reject law threatening media freedom”

Balkan Insight website: Albanian Anti-Corruption Law Worries Media

“Media associations in Albania are asking the Parliament to drop article against the freedom of the media” - Post on Facebook by: Association of Professional Journalists in Albania: Armand SHKULLAKU, Union of Albanian journalists: Aleksander ÇIPA, Alliance of Journalists in Albania: Ylli RAKIP, Association of Electronic Media in Albania: Aleksander FRANGAJ and the European Federation of Journalists (EFJ)

STATE REPLIES

28 Feb 2017 | Reply from the Government of Albania

Letter from the Permanent Representation of Albania to the Council of Europe