On This Cliff Is Matera - Carlo Levi

The misery and degradation of Matera was documented by Carlo Levi in his novel "Cristo si è fermato a Eboli". After the Second World War, Matera was called the "shame of Italy". It became a desert. The Sassi was abandoned and a new town was built. The deserted Matera was frequented by local children and local criminals - serving as a hideout and a playground for both. In the past 60 years Matera has transformed from rural destitution through urban gentrification to touristic ambition. Recently resettled by an Urban elite, restaurateurs and hoteliers, the question is what is the best way forward for Matera?
