2. Summary

The goal of our media exchange was to compare the immigration policies and political strategies between Italy and France. My media report consists in a 27 min radio documentary. It starts with a series of vox pops of the citizens of the multicultural district in Paris (La Villette) who all respond to the same question: Is France a racist country? How is life for immigrants in Paris? Rama Yade's interview follows ordinary citizens' opinion. A former Minister of the Sarkozy's government explains how and why she represented a symbol of diversity in this government adding that she just wanted to be a symbol of French citizens as a whole. So she confesses that being considered an ordinary female politician, wasn't that easy. Rama Yade also gives us an idea of the French model of immigration. The opinions of some minority groups are reflected through the interviews with the most significant representatives of the Turkish community in Paris. Documentary then continues with the vox pops of the citizens interviewed in one of the most multicultural districts in Rome: Piazza Vittorio. Rama Yade's Italian counterpart is former Italian Minister for integration: Cécile Kyenge. She explains her work during the year in this first Ministry for Integration in Italy and why she was so important in promoting diversity not just to Italian citizens but also within politicians. Documentary also hosts a French journalist, Flore Murard-Yovanovich who explains the diverse migration policies of these two countries.
