2. Summary

The article of Natalia dealt with the issue of migrants who seek for legalisation of their stay in Europe - I found an interesting niche of migrants who search for girls on dating websites in order to get them pregnant, therefore as parents they have a right to stay in the EU. Girls accepting these agreements are searching for fathers for mixed-race kids, often unwilling to start a longer relationship with the fathers. I think it is a beginning of an interesting discussion about a small piece of reality we deal with in Europe.

The nature, function, and first-hand experience of family structures varies around different societies in Europe. Families look and feel different in Austria compared with the experience in Poland; in Denmark compared with the experience in Italy. Nevertheless, in most societies and cultures, the term "family" has been an important institution for structuring adult intimate relationships and connecting parents to one another. My article focuses on the hold of family as an institution over the adult life and the need to portray new family concepts in media. According to Institute of Public Affairs there are more than 1 million lone parent families, yet they are not equally represented in the current public dialogue.
