Minimum Corpus of the Council of Europe standards

DRAFT

Document prepared by the Secretariat of the Directorate General of Human Rights and Legal Affairs

1. INTRODUCTION

The present document aims to provide the training institutions with a framework programme to be integrated in the curriculum for the initial and /or continuous training of judges and prosecutors. The necessity of developing the Minimum Corpus of the Council of Europe standards has been studied on several occasions and by several European bodies, with the two main documents being:

- the report of the second meeting of the Lisbon Network on “ The Trainig of Judges on the Application of International Conventions”, Bordeaux, 2 – 4 July 1997;
- Opinion N° 9 of the Consultative Council of European Judges (CCJE) on “The Role of National Judges in ensuring an Effective Application of International and European Law”.

The Minimum Corpus of the Council of Europe standrads contains a list of :

- A. Council of Europe’ conventional acquis;
- B. Council of Europe non-conventional acquis.
- C. Opinions of the CCJE, CCPE and Recommendations of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance (ECRI)

2. THE RELEVANT CONTEXT

In the context of a growing flow of international legal standards on national legal systems, as societies develop and Europe’s legal and judicial systems become more uniform, more integrated:

“National legal systems have, increasingly, to deal with legal issues of an international nature, as a result both of globalisation and of the increasing focus of international and European law on relations between persons rather than states. This development necessitates changes in judicial training, practice and even culture, if national judges are to administer justice meeting the needs and aspirations of the modern world and respecting the legal principles recognised by democratic states¹.”

One of the consequences of this is that national courts have become the guarantors of compliance with, and proper implementation of, the international and European treaties to which their country is a party.

With this in mind, and although sometimes significant variations exist, all states are tending to recognise that international standards take precedence over domestic law.

Yet this process is not unencumbered, with several kinds of obstacles having been identified²:

- obstacles in terms of access to information - not all judges are familiar, as they should be, with the international conventions;
- obstacles of a psychological nature - all too often, judges do not regard international conventions as legislation integrated into their domestic law, but as a kind of "foreign body", which they apply with some hesitancy;
- obstacles of a specifically legal nature - while international conventions may give rise to difficulties of application or interpretation, interpretation by the courts should remain the principle to be observed; otherwise the principle that international conventions take precedence would lose all its substance.

3. TRAINING METHODOLOGIES

- i. Integrate the corpus of Council of Europe law into university syllabuses and into judges' training;
- ii. Provide national judges with information and documentation about the whole corpus of Council of Europe law;
- iii. Ensure the quality of the training of judges/prosecutors in European law;
- iv. Give judges means of accessing information in foreign languages;
- v. Encourage dialogue between national and European judicial organs, amongst institutions responsible for judicial training and amongst judges and prosecutors.

I. Integration of the corpus of Council of Europe law into university syllabuses and into judges' training

Before discussing specific methodologies, and in the light of the considerations set out in the previous section, care should be taken to ensure that the importance of training in the application of international conventions is recognised in strategy documents on judge and prosecutor training, particularly so as to make sure that sufficient funds are made available for this.

In view of the different approaches taken in initial and in-service training, a distinction will be made in this presentation of specific methodologies between judges/prosecutors who are newly recruited and those already in service.

Newly recruited judges/prosecutors

University training, competitions and examinations for entry to national legal services, initial training programmes, these are the different stages at which action should be taken. They are also closely interlinked.

² Conclusions of the 2nd meeting of the Lisbon Network, Bordeaux, 2-4 July 1997.

While it is relatively easy to take action relating to initial training programmes and to national legal service entry tests, university training, in contrast, is not under the direct supervision of training institutions. Training institutions do, however, have several ways of influencing the university curriculum. They could:

- adopt a document setting out the ideal profile of a judge/prosecutor, making references to the requisite level of knowledge and skills relating to international law (including the Council of Europe's legal instruments);
- include in national legal service entry tests subjects testing candidates' ability to apply the corpus of Council of Europe law;
- hold regular meetings between training institutions/judicial service commissions and law faculty leaders to discuss both parties' needs and requirements.

Obvious benefits derive from the inclusion in competitions held to recruit judges/prosecutors of subjects intended to test candidates' ability to apply Council of Europe legal instruments, i.e.:

- a very clear signal is sent out to law faculties about the importance of the study of international conventions;
- training institutions are able to assume, when they prepare their initial training programme, that the students concerned already have a certain level of competence.

The development of the international dimension in initial training nevertheless remains the most important and effective of the measures to be taken to improve future judges'/prosecutors' competence in the field concerned. One of the prerequisites for this is the inclusion of European law in courses in the fundamental disciplines. And there are fields in the corpus of Council of Europe law, such as the protection of fundamental rights, which are extensive and important enough to justify their study in their own right.

Lastly, it seems that testing the quality and quantity of the knowledge acquired during initial training by setting end-of-course examinations also covering European law is a logical part of the process as a whole.

Serving judges/prosecutors

The above thoughts about the development of the international dimension in initial training also apply to in-service training.

Consequently, the corpus of Council of Europe law should be both studied during specialised training and included among the themes for discussion at other training sessions which lend themselves to this. It is desirable that at least some specialised training courses should be organised in co-operation with the Council of Europe and/or other legal service training institutions in Council of Europe member states, and this subject will be pursued below.

A specific need is apparent for legal services such as countries from Central and East European countries, where not all serving judges/prosecutors have undergone in-depth initial training, depending on the time at which they joined the system. Rather than organising one-off training sessions, it may prove more effective if such categories are grouped together for a series of four to five training sessions, which can thus cover a broader field.

The importance of the corpus of Council of Europe law justifies the inclusion in the decentralised training programme of subjects relating to its application. In this context, it is important for the network of instructors in European law to develop uniformly, covering all courts of appeal and the attached prosecutors' offices.

Other measures are conceivable with a view to improving judges'/prosecutors' competence in respect of the legal instruments developed at the Council of Europe, although their application in practice depends on the specific characteristics of each judicial system:

- inclusion of competence in European law as one of the criteria for the promotion of judges/prosecutors to higher courts;
- inclusion amongst the criteria taken into account for the appraisal of judges'/prosecutors' work of their training in European law, or of the regular and appropriate references made in their rulings to the corpus of Council of Europe law.

II. Providing national judges with information and documentation about the whole corpus of Council of Europe law

The following are among the measures intended to achieve this goal:

- a guarantee of Internet access from the premises of the training institution and from the centre for students of the training institutions;
- the organisation of training in how to find relevant legal information on the Internet, and the writing and making available to interested judges/prosecutors of guides to legal research;
- the provision of access for judges/prosecutors to national case-law databases, so that they can make a comparative study of the application by various European courts of the corpus of Council of Europe law;
- translation of the corpus of Council of Europe law so that it can then be made available to judges/prosecutors, either on paper or in electronic form (on the Internet site or via the distribution of CDs);
- ongoing supply to the training institution's library of the latest works on European law,

- requests to the institution's instructors to summarise, index and annotate the relevant information, making it easier for judges/prosecutors to read it, and the placing of such information at a legal resource centre for their use;
- setting up of a virtual information office relating to international conventions (helpline), with on-line access to information; the functioning of such an office requires a team of specialists capable of answering the questions raised by the persons concerned, the creation of an e-mail address for the submission of questions and the creation of links between the specialists for the collection of questions and sending out of replies;
- publication in specialised legal journals, etc, of articles on the application of the Council of Europe's legal instruments.

III. Ensuring the quality of the training of judges/prosecutors in European law

The development of the European dimension in initial and in-service training programmes for judges/prosecutors should go hand in hand with measures to ensure the quality of such programmes. These measures relate to the establishment of training programmes, access to these programmes, the choice of instructors, teaching materials and training methods, instructor training and international co-operation in the implementation of the said programmes.

In order to decide the content of initial and in-service training programmes, the authority responsible for training should first³:

- ascertain the training needs of the judicial system. This requires recourse to several categories of persons and information: not only instructors, but also judges/prosecutors themselves (through judges' and prosecutors' associations, for example), those who work alongside them (lawyers, notaries, bailiffs, etc), civil society, case statistics, analyses of questions of law differently resolved in judicial practice and the types of cases in international courts (first and foremost the European courts in Strasbourg and Luxembourg);
- take account of the lessons learned following an evaluation of the training provided the previous year.

Where the choice of participants is concerned, training institutions should ensure the transparency of their training programmes with a European focus and the equity of participant selection methods.

The choice of instructors, methods and teaching materials should reflect a concern to offer quality training centred on the needs of the system: the judiciary should be well represented among the instructors, the subjects discussed should cover aspects of particular relevance to judicial practice, and the teaching materials used should be appropriate⁴.

An instructor training system should be set up, covering both subject matter (updating on recent developments in the corpus of Council of Europe law) and method; the ongoing co-operation of an education sciences specialist is desirable in this context.

Added value undeniably comes from the organisation of training in European law in co-operation with the Council of Europe or with other legal service training institutions in Council of Europe member states.

In any case, there is no doubt whatsoever that every training institution needs to set up a system for evaluating the quality of the training provided, covering all these programmes and activities⁵, so including the training which has a European dimension.

IV. Giving judges means of accessing information in foreign languages

An improvement in judges'/prosecutors' linguistic skills is vital if they are to take more account in their activities of the corpus of Council of Europe law.

Foreign language training is so important that judicial systems are increasingly making it compulsory during initial and in-service training programmes. And increasing numbers of strategy documents relating to the justice system at national and European levels mention this as an objective⁶. It is inconceivable that a common judicial culture could be created without mutual understanding between legal systems and judges/prosecutors.

Numerous measures can be taken to improve the language skills of European judges/prosecutors⁷:

- introduction of foreign language training programmes, both at national level and on a decentralised basis,
- compulsory language training during initial training period,
- introduction of training programmes for instructors, some recruited from the legal service; creation of legal training courses for instructors from outside the service,

⁴ Opinion No. 9 (2006) of the Consultative Council of European Judges (CCJE) on “The role of national judges in ensuring an effective application of international and European law”, paragraph 14.

⁵ “In order continuously to improve the quality of judicial training, the organs responsible for training should conduct frequent assessments of programmes and methods”, CCJE, Opinion No. 4 (2003), see paragraphs 38 and 42.

⁷ See, for example, the conclusions of the meeting on language training in Europe, held by the EJTN in Bucharest on 13 and 14 September 2007.

- creation of a network of specialist foreign language instructors, making it easier for them to exchange ideas about best practice,
- production of legal dictionaries, databases covering equivalent terms and on-line training programmes, etc.

V. Encouraging dialogue between national and European judicial organs, amongst institutions responsible for judicial training and amongst judges and prosecutors

The development of European co-operation, whether formal or informal, between courts, legal service training establishments and judges/prosecutors themselves is, quite clearly, likely to promote the taking into account of the corpus of Council of Europe law. Thus Council of Europe legal instruments will be better known and more uniformly applied in different countries.

It is highly likely that common training at European level on European issues will be available in future. This presupposes the existence of several intermediate stages⁸:

- gradual harmonisation as training programmes on European issues are developed;
- development of European quality standards in the field of training;
- creation of a network of educational resources and instructors in the field of education on European issues;
- an increase in co-operative activities: training periods abroad for students of the training institutions and for judges/prosecutors and instructors, training periods with European institutions and courts, other meetings (summer schools, competitions for students of the training institutions, training activities for judges/prosecutors from other countries, etc);
- an increase in the study of foreign languages.

3. CRIME PROBLEMS

a. The treatment of offenders

In general

The main texts are: R (65) 1, R (70) 1, R (76) 10 and R(84) 10.

Limited recourse to deprivation of liberty and more particularly to long-term imprisonment. Increasing recourse to alternative measures as well as measures for the supervision, assistance and after-care of released offenders. Promotion of community sanctions and measures. Specific measures relating to criminal records.

Prisoner's rights

Basic texts: The European prison rules [R (87) 3] which have replaced the old text on the standard minimum rules for the treatment of prisoners [R (73) 5] and which are completed by several texts especially dealing with electoral, civil and social rights [R (62) 2], prison leave [R (82) 16], custody and treatment of dangerous prisoners [R (82) 17], the case of foreign prisoners [R (84) 12], education in prison [R (89) 12], health problems in prison, transmissible diseases [R (93) 6], and overcrowded prisons, prison population inflation [R (99) 22]. Recently, R (2003) 23 on the management by prison administrations of life sentence and other long-term prisoners as well as the new Recommendation (2006) 2 on the European Prison Rules.

Other texts: R (75) 25 and R (76) 2

Social reintegration, individualisation of the system and treatments are the guiding principles.

Rights of sentenced offenders to sanctions and measures non restrictive of liberty

Basic text: European rules on community sanctions and measures [R (92) 16]. Other texts: R (2000) 22 on improving the implementation of the European rules on community sanctions and measures; R (2003) 22 on conditional release (parole)

Juvenile delinquency and protection of youth and family

Basic texts: R (66) 25 and R (87) 20. Other texts : R (67) 13, R (69) 6, R (78) 62, R (79) 17, R (85) 4, R (87) 20, R (88) 6, R (91) 1, and R (2000) 20.

As far as young delinquents, under 21 years old, are concerned: no to deprivation of liberty, no to long-term measures, yes to preventive measures even by the press and the cinema. Specific measures relating to violence in families, young persons who come from migrant families and the traffic of children and young adults.

- Recommendation R (2003) 20 concerning new ways of dealing with juvenile delinquency and the role of juvenile justice.

b. Criminal procedure

Several rights provided by Articles 5 and 6 of the European Convention of Human Rights were subject to further developments adapted to particular circumstances. Thus:

- the right to a fair trial, as far as judgements held in the absence of the accused are concerned [R (75) 11];
- the right to be heard when proceedings in criminal matters are transferred [R (79) 12];
- the right to be heard before the execution of the sentence, privative of liberty, is validated in another country [R (79) 13];
- the right to be informed on extradition requests [R (80)7];
- the right to be heard on the arguments against extradition [R (80) 7];
- the right for sentenced persons to be informed of the possibilities and conditions relating to their transfer in their country of origin [R (84) 11];
- the right to question or to ask that a prosecution witness be questioned [R (97) 13].

Some further principles are established, in particular:

- the principle of proportionality between the seriousness of the offence and the harshness that may result from the procedure of extradition [R (80) 7];
- the principle, which consists in the need of simple and summary procedures in order to obtain a sane administration of justice [R (68) 25, R (79) 15, R (87) 18 and R (88) 13];
- the guiding principles in the matter of simplified and summary procedures [R (87) 19];
- the guiding principles in the matter of sentencing, particularly as far as coherence in sentencing is concerned [R (92) 17];
- criteria in searching the truth [R (75) 12];
- the need of individualisation of the sentences [R (75) 12];
- principles concerning the use of deoxyribonucleic acid (DNA) within the framework of the criminal justice system;
- guiding principles on problems of criminal procedural law connected with information technology [R (95) 13];

- guiding principles concerning measures aiming to limit intimidation of witnesses [R (97) 13].

c. Detention on remand in custody, pending investigation or trial

Basic texts: R (65) 11 and R (80) 11. Other texts: R (80) 7, R (84) 12 and R (86) 13.

Detention on remand in custody or pending investigation or trial must remain an exceptional measure, guided by the principle of the presumption of innocence. It should be non compulsory, non punitive, reasoned, of a limited time, applied only if strictly necessary and only if the person concerned has been brought before a judicial authority. The periods of detention on remand in custody should be taken in consideration at the time of the sentencing.

These principles also apply to detention pending extradition [R (75) 12 and R (80) 7].

d. Combating sexual exploitation and abuse of children and other vulnerable persons

- Recommendation No. (91) 11 on Sexual exploitation, Pornography and Prostitution of, Trafficking in, Children and Young Adults.
- The European Follow-up conference to the Stockholm World congress against Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (Strasbourg, 28 – 29 April 1998) was organised, with a view to taking stock of the measures taken at national level, identifying problems encountered by Governments in implementing the Stockholm Agenda for Action and presenting examples of relevant good practice in combating the crimes concerned.
- Recommendation (2001) 16 on the protection of children against sexual exploitation.
- Resolution ResAP (2005) 1 on safeguarding adults and children with disabilities against abuse.

e. Crime policy

- (a) In addition to the above principles and in general:

(Basic texts: Recommendation R (2003) 21 concerning partnership in crime prevention; Recommendation R (96) 8 concerning crime policy in Europe in time of change).

- selective recourse to criminal law: need to decriminalise (transfer from criminal to civil procedures) certain behaviours (cf. Report on decriminalisation, 1980); establishment of dejudicialisation policies;
- no to short-term sentences which imply a deprivation of liberty; criminal justice must have a social trend rather than a punitive trend [R (73) 17 and R (73) 24];
- priority to the prevention of crime [R (87) 19];
- need of the participation of the public in crime policy [R (83) 7];
- selective recourse to crime liability of legal persons [R (88) 18].

(b) Particularly concerning:

organised crime

Recommendation (2001) 11 concerning guiding principles on the fight against organised crime.

protection of victims

Fundamental principles: the protection of victims; assistance to victims and prevention of victimisation deserve a pre-eminent place in the framework of criminal law and procedure; the need to improve the answers of the system of criminal justice and society to the victim's requirements [mainly R (85) 11 and R (87) 21, but also R (77) 27 and R (82) 14].

protection of witnesses and collaborators of justice

Recommendation Rec (2005) 9 on the protection of witnesses and collaborators of justice.

racism

drug abuse

Need of a coherent and global policy, founded on prevention. Repression must only be complementary [R (73) 6].

terrorism

Condemnation of terrorism, need of prevention and repression. Objective limits to violence for political reasons [R (74) 3, R (70) 23, R (82) 1]. Special investigation techniques [Rec (2005) 10]. Identity and travel documents [Rec (2005) 7].

organ trafficking

Recommendation Rec (2004) 7 on organ trafficking.

consumer protection

Need to match the rules on consumer protection with criminal sanctions in order to better protect life, health and their legitimate economic interests [R (82) 15].

protection of the environment

Need to match the rules on protection of the environment with criminal sanctions while placing them in the global policy context [R (77) 28].

economic crime

Need of specific measures, on one hand against economic crime [R (81) 12] and, on the other, concerning computer-related crime [R (89) 9].

transfer and laundering of funds of criminal origin

The accumulation of funds of criminal origin and the factual power it entails constitute a risk for the principles defended by the Council of Europe. Thus, the need to adopt specific measures [R (80) 10, R (91) 12].

road safety

Road safety demands a specific treatment for road traffic offences [R (68) 25, R (71) 28, R (73) 7, R (75) 24, R (77) 29 and R (78) 42, R (79) 15].

criminological research

Need to base any crime policy on the data of criminological research [R (66) 18, R (67) 5, R (70) 13, R (73) 25 and R (76) 38].
